A number of SIWA instructors met [REDACTED] on 10-11 June to put the finishing touches on the schedule for I.W.A. which begins 12 July. Tony [REDACTED] represented the Operations School. The proposed one-week Intelligence Writing Course which will immediately follow the I.W.A. was also discussed.

4. Intelligence Production Course

The Intelligence Production Course concluded on Friday with student briefings on their course research papers. All but one of the papers dealt with Agency intelligence activities and methodology; the one paper was a substantive study of Chinese military expenditures which included a methodology. Three of the four CTs in the class are now on full-time assignments in [] DCS, and NPIC. One of the CTs is on an additional interim assignment in OSP, working on a special project related to real time intelligence.

5. Advanced Intelligence Seminar

As mentioned in more detail in the course report to the DTR, the fifth running of the Advanced Intelligence Seminar (AIS), which was held from 5-21 May 1971, was especially rewarding in that the caliber of speakers improved over that of the previous running and the mix of students, strengthened by eight nominees to senior schools next fall, was a good one. All but one were complimentary of the course -- the one student explained that his ONE duties made the seminar topics somewhat redundant. Many wrote on the final day that the 2 1/2 weeks had helped them "professionally." The in class discussions seemed to be more effective, largely due to the dynamism of the class, and the speaker-student discussions worked out better. For whatever reasons, the Class meetings with senior Agency officers, the four Deputies, and especially with the Director -- who spent an hour answering questions -- were more rewarding than in previous course runnings.

With at least 20 nominees for the next course, the staff are considering an extra running during 8-24 September -- prior to the fall openings of the Senior Seminar, the Midcareer Course, and the Advanced Operations Course. While there might be more difficulty in getting some of the good speakers, having two fall runnings (six weeks apart) would enable the staff to cut the class to a more workable size of 25 each, which would maintain the quality of the class and also induce a better rapport between students and speakers and among the students themselves.
